CLERGY READILY ACCEPTED OFFER

Responses from Ministers in and Around El Paso and Their Decision Awaited.

Their Decision Awaited.

"The clergy of El Paso and for a hundred miles around the city have readily accepted the invitation published in the El Paso papers to make an imparital test of Plant Juice," states the demonstrator stationed at Kelly & Poliard's drug store. "The response has been even more hearty than we anticipated, for we have had numerous calls daily of ministers willing to make the test and also many have accepted by mail communications. You'll we furnished a supply of "Plant Juice," and within a week we should begin getting the individual verdicts.

"We are certain these will be highly favorable, for there is no class to whom take great vegetable tonic appeals with more force than to the clergy. Many of them undergo severe nervous strain, both physically and mentally and are sufferers of that all prevailing complaint—mersous debility. Our cities are fail of nervous, debilitated, stomach-troubled people. They are depressed in spirits, lucking in vitality, dull, morbid, listless, have indigestion, poor appetites, foul breath, had blood and poor circulation. In general these lifs may be charged to present-day civilization and to modes of city life. There has for years been a cry of Back to Nature' from the sufferers of our cities. Very few are able to seek health by going out and living close to nature, but there is another roud to the same end, and Col. Frank A. Dillinghum of Plant Juice' fame has adopted for it the slogan of Forward to Nature'. It is a road that all may travel and 'Plant Juice,' the greatest of vegetable tonics, is it. 'Plant Juice' is made up of the extracts and essences of roots, barks, herbs, fibers and flowers of Nature's medicinal herbs. It is a remedy from the great laboratory of Nature, and a perfect specific for all fills hearing the following symptoms: Indigestion, heartburn, pulpitation of the heart, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, fermentation, acidity; for removal of the cause of piles, excessive bile indicated by yellow skin, blotches, pimples, palms in the back noon of the kindergarten work of the Sunshine society day nursery was well attended and much interest was aroused in the songs and games given by the 20 Sunshine nursery tots, under the direction of Mrs. C. N. Vanderwater, the kindergarten teacher of the nursery. The afternoon program began with a march, which finished with the youngsters carrying their chairs from the kindergarten room to the parlors, where they formed a circle and sang the following songs: "Opening prayer"; hymn. "Dear Father we thank Thee for care through the night"; Good Morning, Merry Sunshine"; Thumbs and fingers say Good Morning". "Thumbs and fingers say Good Morning". "Thumbkin says I'll dance"; "Pigeon house"; and a song in Spanish. The kindergarten games of Shoemaker. Little Stream, Blacksmith, Cat and Mice, and Hare in the Hollow, were played, followed by another song in Spanish, a lesson in English phrases and closing with "America."

Mrs. B. C. Bay, the matron of the nursery, played the piano accompaniments for the songs and games.

As the majority of the youngsters are Spanish speaking, the work in the English phrases is helping them toward speaking English. The kindergarter necessarily speaks both languages. The average attendance at the kindergarten is between 17 and 20 children and it has proved one of the most useful parts of the day nursery work. A sand pile has recently been contributed by Alfred Courchesne to the playground adjoining the house, and has given a vast amount of pleasure to the nursery children. The nursery is doing much good in caring for the children of working women while they are out at their daily labors. The hursery building is at 219 South Campbell street and 1s very well adapted to the needs of the work. An average of 33 children are cared for daily, ranging from babies of a few months old to youngsters of 6 and 7.

He Kisses Her.

She turned to walk away. But I did not let her go that way. I dropped Manette, pulled my hand from the tight grasp Elizabeth held to it, and with every chance of Thompson and the whole world seeing, I grabbed Josephine in my arms, kissed her as I never kissed any woman before, and then pushed her from me.

I had to do it. I am a gentleman, and have every instinct good breeding implants. I have always been chivalrous and considerate of women, and have never knowingly injured or wrongel I furnish her means for that purpose that are practically unlimited, there are not two better dressed children anywhere.

I believe I am telling this for the same reason that one hems and haws before beginning a story. It is not exactly to gain time, but because I do not want to begin it. And so because I dread telling what passed between Josephine and me, I go into descriptions of the children's frocks.

Josephine did not turn her head when crossed the grass. She saw me when entered the park; that I knew. But it was never Josephine's way to be straightfordward, even in little things as other women naturally are.

Josephine's Trick.

It is her nature to trick, and she fild it when it was needless as naturally as she did it when deception served her.

She even pretended to be surprised to see me there. That she had gene there on the chance of meeting me I did not doubt. That she knew Thompson and the children were vailing for me was obvious.

But she gave a little gasp of sarprise that was exceedingly well done. I must say. I can recall the time when it would have fooled me.

"Why. Max." she said; "you here!" I had no idea I would see wou here."

I mumbled something about arcansing to meet the children there for a drive, all the time looking at her with eyes that must have told of the fight I was making on myself to keep my

"I was sitting here thinking of you when your man drove up with the children," she said with just the faint-est little sigh. "I often come to the park that I may sit here and think of you, Max."

I recalled that the last time I saw here there she was with Dribbles, but said nothing, still looking at her, and noting the little wisp of hair the wind had blown across her cheek.

I was thinking how I would like to curl it over the end of my finger, and that while I was doing that I would like to kiss a certain little dimple at one corner of her mouth.

ene corner of her mouth.

"I am the most unhappy."

"I am the most unhappy girl in the world," she went on, and I looked to see her eyes fill with tears. If they had, I tnink, I would have grabbed her to m' heart then and there, and carried her off to a preacher forthwith. But there were no tears there.

True, there were tears in her voice, but I have heard somewhere that it is an easy matter to throw tears into one's voice. Speakers make national reputations for eloquence by learning the trick. Josephine's voice sounded wistful and unhappy. It was full of loneliness and longing. But her eyes were as dry as mine.

"Won't you sit down, Max?" making toom on the beach beside her.

I could do nothing else, and when I had taken the seat. Elizabeth climbed up beside me, holding tight to my hand.

"I will take Manette." I said. "She

"I will take Manette," I said. "She is too heavy for you to hold."
Josephine protested, and held her arms tighter around the child. But Manette, always fickle, had tired of the pretty lady who held her, and put out her arms to me.

A Hand Clasp.

In lifting her from Josephine's arms my hand touched Josephine's.

In a second all my resolutions, my vows, my best instincts and my santity were swept away, and my hand closed over hers in a grasp so fierce I know I must have hurt her.

For one moment I was mad for her. I couldn't take my hand from hers, and I think the hunger in my eyes would have frightened a better woman. But Josephine only smiled, and in that smile there lurked a pride of her smile there lurked a pride of her smile there lurked a pride of her smile there had classes.
